MEMORANDUM FOR: General Carter

I saw Johnny Johnson at a class luncheon today and asked him if you had yet twisted his arm to come over for a briefing. He said that you hadn't exactly twisted his arm but had suggested it to him. I encouraged him to do this, and he expressed real interest while at the same time saying that he couldn't possibly do it this month.

Personally, while I have the highest regard for Johnson, in my casual conversations with him I think that I detect definite reservations about the Agency, and I think that we could make some money by getting him over for lunch and a first-class briefing.

I suggest that within the next few days you press him for a definite date sometime after 1 February.
